Failure to handle under-frequency led to nationwide blackout: Nasrul Hamid

DHAKA : As a follow-up of the last November 1 nationwide blackout, Power Division on Wednesday placed a good number of short-, medium- and long-term recommendations to check further interruption in the national power grid system, reports UNB.

The recommendations include upgrading the current grid transmission system from manual to automatic and synchronising the timing watches at grid substations and power plants with the global positioning system (GPS), and also introducing ICT based communication system. A total of 32 recommendations have been placed of which 22 are short-term and 22 are medium- and long-term.

However, the inquiry committee, which prepared the recommendations after a wide and thorough investigation about the November 1 grid failure incident, still could not reach any conclusion as exactly why and from which point the technical glitch generated.

Initially, the Power Division officials had blamed a technical fault and under-frequency symptom that developed in the Indian part of the cross-border electricity transmission lines for the nationwide grid failure.

Cricketing luminaries bid an emotional farewell to Phillip Hughes at a funeral service held in his home town Wednesday, as Australia stopped to remember the popular batsman whose death from a freak injury sent shockwaves through the sport.

A lone cricket bat rested against the coffin at a packed service in his former high school hall in Macksville on the New South Wales coast in front of his heartbroken parents and friends and a shattered Australian Test team.

Hughes, who had played 26 Tests and was on the cusp of a recall, died from bleeding on the brain last Thursday after being hit on the base of the skull by a rising ball at the Sydney Cricket Ground.

His tragic death stunned Australia, where cricket is considered the national game, and prompted a rescheduling of the upcoming India Test series, while fans around the world placed cricket bats outside their front doors as a mark of respect.

Australia's Captain Michael Clarke spoke of the remarkable outpouring of grief that has come from around the world in the wake of Hughes' death, and openly wondered if it was a tangible example of the much-mentioned 'spirit of cricket'. He said Hughes' spirit was now "part of our game forever" and "will act as a custodian of the sport we all love", and urged cricketers to "play on".

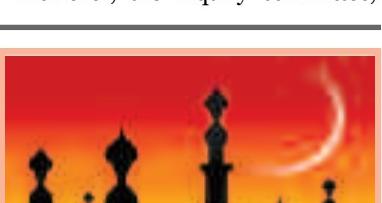

Among many indelible images and words, that of thousands following Hughes through the heart of Macksville will not be forgotten in a hurry. The Hughes family, Clarke, his wife Kyly, and the Australian Test team walked together with locals, visitors, administrators and Australia's prime minister Tony Abbott. Brian Lara, who had been in Australia, was representing the West Indies Cricket Board which noted

When people like us pass away we get no help, no commendations. I feel sorry for those who didn't live long enough to get anything."

Like others Masuk Ali had applied for being recognized as a freedom fighter. His fresh application was inexplicably rejected. If only the government devises some means of easing the physical burden on the old men. Various freedom fighters of Gopalganj demanded Masuk Ali to get his recognition as soon as possible.

Implementing longer term plans for water supply

A recent newspaper photograph showed how thousands of gallons of water spew out uselessly from roadside taps as their control valves have been stolen by petty thieves. Surely, such thievery can be stopped from proper vigilance. But did anyone ever try? Very probably not.

Rain harvesting or catching the rainfall during the wet months in reservoirs and then using the same in the drier months, should be practiced. Many modern cities round the world get a big share of their waters for daily use in this manner. But this is yet to happen in Dhaka.

Already, fresh water supply for over 15 million residents of Dhaka city is posing as a serious problem. The demand for water in the city is projected to rise to almost double at 5 billion liters per day from the consequences of rapid migration of people to it by 2020. Therefore, the existing plans for increasing water supply by WASA need to be implemented in time.

A recent media report --sometime ago-- stated that WASA aims to reduce its dependence on underground water from the present 87 per cent to 50 per cent in the next five years. This is for the obvious reasons of the risks involved in reckless lifting of underground water causing dangerous land subsidence and the fast falling level of underground water.

But all rivers or sources of surface water flowing near Dhaka are found too contaminated by pollution. Therefore, waters from rivers which have relatively fresher waters such as Meghna and Brahmaputra, must be treated and then piped to Dhaka. This is an imperative.

Funds would be required for the purpose and the same may be sought from donor organizations like the Asian Development Bank (ADB). It was reported that the ADB considered a grant of some $ 250 million for ensuring the adequate supply of safe water round-the-clock in Dhaka city. Government needs to be in closer communication with ADB to be able to line up the finances for these projects at the earliest.

Sea water can be made into freshwater. The process is called desalination, and it is being used more and more around the world to provide people with needed freshwater.

Time is ripe also to start considering the establishment of desalination plants in Bangladesh as our rivers are experiencing leaner and more polluted flows and it is proving to be too dangerous to encourage free style lifting of underground water. Sooner rather than later Bangladesh has to look to the ocean to get large scale supply of water after desalination. The faster works start in this direction, the better for the water security of the country even in the short term. Bangladesh should start knocking at the doors of the World Bank and other donors to line up funds for the early establishment of such desalination plants.

What does French vote really mean for Palestine?

Alain Gresh

To really make a difference, France must go beyond rhetorical statements.

On November 29, the French parliament convened to discuss a motion on the recognition of the State of Palestine by France. On December 2, it voted "yes" with 339 to 151 votes in favour of a symbolic motion to recognise Palestine as a state.

To understand the meaning of such a move, we must refer to the speech made to members of parliament by Foreign Affairs Minister Laurent Fabius: "Far from being a semantic quarrel, the current motion is not an injunction but an invitation addressed by the government. So, there is no ambiguity over the issue of recognising the State of Palestine. The Parliament has the powers to decide, and it will do so, but under our Constitution, the executive - and only the executive - is judge of the political expediency."

To explain his thoughts, Fabius added: "Alone, or with the United States' assistance, both parties always managed to negotiate successfully, however, they failed to come to an agreement. Particularly for domestic political reasons, the two sides failed to reach the final concessions imposed by signing a compromise. Therefore, we need to re-evaluate this method. We need to engage with both parties. Some suggest pressure from the international community will help the two sides reach the indispensable final consensus and take the final step that will lead to peace."

Fabius suggested an international conference to be held and a two-year time frame to be set, "because in the absence of a time frame, how could we be sure this will not be just another process with no real prospect of success?"

French intentions: This discussion clarifies the intentions of French officials. If negotiations fail in two years, Paris will not recognise the State of Palestine. What the minister did not say, however, is why and how the two-year time frame would change the situation.

It is worth mentioning here that the Oslo agreements set 1999 as the deadline for Israeli-Palestinian negotiations. The 2003 Roadmap sponsored by the Quartet also announced 2005 as the end of Israeli-Palestinian negotiations. The Annapolis summit in 2007, convened by US President George W. Bush, called for a Palestinian state by 2007 and in 2010, US President Barack Obama called for the creation of a Palestinian state by 2011.

Another element of Fabius' speech is also worth highlighting. He argues that the cause of failure of the negotiations would come from the inability of the "two parties" to come to a consensus. Thus, it is not Israel that, for decades, has violated international law, expanded settlements, accentuated the Judaisation of Jerusalem and maintained Gaza's blockade. Consequently, according to Fabius, both parties should be held responsible.

The recognition of the State of Palestine by France will constitute a step forward. In fact, the debate should be contextualised. It is about a solidarity movement with Palestine that has expanded after the Israeli aggression against Gaza last summer. Sweden was the first country in the European Union to recognise the State of Palestine (as well as some other countries, including the former Eastern bloc countries, before joining EU). The British Parliament and the Spanish Congress also voted for the motion. As for the European Parliament, it decided, under Israeli pressure, to postpone the vote that should have taken place on November 27, for several weeks.

Does Tehran really need a nuclear bomb?

ABDULATEEF AL-MULHIM

The Iranian nuclear program was planned and initiated during the Cold War era. It matured as a program during the 1960s through European companies with the help of the United States, in the name of the idea called "Atoms for peace." To this day, I still wonder how could one achieve peace by using nuclear weapons.

The nuclear program in Iran went as planned. It is true that Iran is a huge country with a fast-growing population and has all the right to plan for its future particularly when it comes to addressing its growing energy needs. But why does it need a nuclear bomb?

What if Iran acquires nuclear bomb(s)? Will it use it or simply keep it as a trophy at a time when most, if not all, nuclear powers are working meticulously to find solutions to do away with their nuclear arsenals.

The erstwhile Iranian Empire and later on the Islamic Republic of Iran has the most controversial nuclear program in the world. Since its inception, the Iranian nuclear program has experienced many ups and downs.

Observers may recall that when Bushehr Nuclear Power Plant was almost nearing completion, the 1979 revolution erupted and reports emerged claiming that Ayatollah Khomeini deemed making destructive weapons un-Islamic. Besides, it is not cheap to build nuclear reactors. Then the Iraq-Iran war broke out and the Iraqis attacked the main nuclear facilities in Bushehr.

Iran was forced to use paint sealant to cover the main dome and things came to a standstill. The most notable thing about the Bushehr plant is that it has been built using western technologies, which is far more complicated and advanced than the Soviet-era facilities. After the Iraq-Iran war, which ended in August 1988, Iran was left with no friends in the West and it had to turn to the cash-starved Russia and the former Soviet-bloc countries. The Iranians tried to contact countries like Spain and Argentina, but discussions never materialized.

When the Iranians decided to restart their nuclear program, they declared to the world that they were a country with about 70 million people and they simply needed more energy resources because oil and gas production were being decreased by 10 percent each year due to the old or obsolete oil production infrastructure and facilities. The dilapidated condition of the oil production infrastructure was a result of the 8-year war with Iraq and the western boycott of Iran. However, due to the loopholes in the international markets, Iran managed to increase its pace in getting the nuclear program back on track. It was obvious that Iran would not quit its quest for attaining nuclear capabilities. They were somehow able to trick the IAEA inspectors. No one knows for sure how far Iran is from becoming a nuclear power. But the question remains: What will Iran do with its nuclear bomb? Is it to dominate the region or is it an attempt to restore past glories?

It is true that the main industrial countries build nuclear facilities to produce more electrical power to run their industrial machines and as a deterrent but at the end of the day, those industrial countries want to boost their economies and raise the standards of living of their people. It is ironic to see clearly that Iran possesses more capabilities and assets than many of today's industrial countries. Iran has one of the richest histories and culture in the world, a history that goes back to thousands of years. Iran produces the best and finest saffron, which is more expensive than gold and has the most beautiful and expensive rugs in the world. Persian pistachio and caviar can produce and generate more money for Iran's suffering economy if utilized in better ways. The Iranians are very hard working people and their land with its variety of topographies from high mountains to the beaches can be a tourist attraction for many in the area. It is sad to see all the assets and money being wasted on building nuclear facilities, which is only causing harm to the Iranians. It is important to focus on building Iranian economy to raise the standard of living of Iranians. An Iranian nuclear bomb may raise the moral of many Iranians, but it is high standard of living that can bring the hundreds of thousands of Iranian brains back from the West. Iran might have the capabilities to build a nuclear bomb but the question remains ...then what?

Vladimir Putin's visit can oil India-Russia ties

GULSHAN SACHDEVA

Russian President Vladimir Putin will visit India in December for the 15th annual India-Russia Summit. This will be his 11th summit with the Indian leadership since he signed the strategic partnership with Atal Bihari Vajpayee in 2000. Between 2008 and 2011, Russia was represented by Dmitry Medvedev. Prime Minister Narendra Modi had a brief interaction with Putin during the sixth BRICS summit in July. He described that "even a child in India, if asked to say who is India's best friend, will reply it is Russia because Russia has been with India in times of crisis." As chief minister of Gujarat, Modi had signed a protocol of cooperation between the state and the Astrakhan region of Russia in 2001. There are serious possibilities of cooperation due to renewed focus on the international North South Trade Corridor, India's possible entry into the Shanghai Cooperation Organisation, increasing linkages with the Customs Union of Belarus, Kazakhstan and Russia as well as the possibilities of bringing Russian hydrocarbons by the land route to India. Still, the immediate task would be to involve Russia seriously in the 'Make in India' initiative, particularly in defence and infrastructure. Besides, some practical steps are needed in trade and commerce, which has been the weakest link in bilateral ties since the early 1990s. During earlier summits, the trade turnover targets set were $10 billion by 2010 and $15 billion by 2015. We are nowhere close to achieving these figures. Immediate action would be needed to resolve problem areas known for years, viz the information gap and visa problems faced by Indian companies. Generally, India and Russia share excellent political relations. As a result, the strategic partnership was elevated to 'special and privileged strategic partnership' in 2010. In the 14 summits since 2000, the two have signed 128 agreements/ memorandums of understandings/declarations in the areas of military and technical cooperation, space, nuclear energy, hydrocarbons, trade and economics, terrorism, education and culture. As some of these declarations remained on paper, now the focus should be on deliverables with clear timelines. Russia has a clear comparative advantage in the arms industry, hydrocarbons and nuclear energy. And India has provided good business in all these areas. According to the Stockholm International Peace Research Institute's (SIPRI's) arms transfer database, at 1990 constant prices, India imported weapons worth about $32 billion from Russia between 1992 and 2013. This was 73% of total arms imports by India during this period. Since 2007, India is the largest export market of Russian weapons. In a few areas, military technical cooperation has already evolved and moved towards joint research and production. Notable examples include the BrahMos missile, fifth generation fighter aircraft and multi-transport aircraft. The SU-30 aircraft and T-90 tanks are also produced in India under licence. With changing production and procurement dynamics of the Indian arms industry, there are indications that Russia is eager to participate further through 'Make in India'. Indian companies have invested about $6.5 billion in Russia, mainly in the energy sector in Sakhalin 1 and Imperial Energy. Russian company Rosneft recently offered ONGC stakes in two Siberian oilfields. The real challenge, however, is to attract Russian companies to India. So far, they have invested only about $1 billion in India.

As a result of the Ukrainian crisis, Russia is facing serious difficulties, including economic sanctions, with the West. Both Europe and Russia are trying to diversify their energy dependence on each other. This is the right time to forge some serious energy ties with Russia. There are reports indicating a vision document being prepared outlining a gas pipeline, an oil pipeline and a swap mechanism deal in which Russia may facilitate Indian oil payments to Iran. These initiatives may prove a game changer in India-Russia ties.

Should you ever criticise teenagers for what they wear?

HUGH MUIR, JINAN YOUNIS, FLIC EVERETT, ANOUCHKA GROSE AND FRANKLYN ADDO

Does Elizabeth Lauten - the Congressional PR spinner who lost her job for questioning the dress sense of President Obama's daughters - have children? Those of us who have a normal relationship with teenage offspring long ago gave up commenting on what they choose to wear. Once you reach a certain age, your appreciation of what is appropriate for a teenage girl dwindles to almost nothing. Your ability to impose your will goes with it. This also applies to presidents. Complain if you will about the Ugg boots, the tights revealing all contours, the low tops, the short shorts, the improbable heels. All a waste of breath. I once joined a shopping trip in pursuit of some of this stuff. In Hollister, we wandered around in the dark for a few minutes. I thought there had been a power cut. They said it was a fashionable half-light. Presumably to obscure the prices. This is no doubt one of those things parents worry about too much. Without letting you know they know, they do in fact know when the eyelash extensions should stay in the box and a sensible skirt is called for. They might not appear to be absorbing instructions. That's because they are watching you instead. Frankly, my concern is less will they embarrass me than might I, by dressing like a hobo embarrass them. Once, arriving after a gym session to collect my daughter from a supermarket, I saw her friend dig her in the ribs. What did she say, I asked her later. "She wanted to know why that tramp was waving at us." In our society women's bodies are a battleground. The clothes that women wear shape our identity, yet these same clothes can be deeply restrictive. We're taught first to hate our bodies, to cover them or reveal them according to what is considered acceptable. Then we're told that we're not there quite yet, and that the clothes we wear are crucial to making us the "perfect" women the world wants us to be. This policing of women's bodies starts early, and when young women are told repeatedly that their attire is linked to their worth, they fall prey to the unrelenting standards of capitalist patriarchy in which they are made to feel as though their appearance is the most important aspect of them as women. For women of colour in particular, it is important not to look at this in isolation. Black women's bodies have been and continue to be policed more than others, even within feminist spaces. The link that society makes between what black women choose to wear and their sexuality is a manifestation of the deep-rooted racism that is still prevalent today. We're taught to fear black women who take ownership of their bodies, and the clothes that they wear are under much greater scrutiny as a result.

The clothes that women wear should never be criticised, because such scrutiny is not restricted to our clothes: it's of our identities, our sense of self-worth, and our place in this society. We, as young women, are reclaiming our bodies for ourselves, and with it, the clothes that we put on them. It's difficult to do so when we're bombarded with images telling us we'll never be perfect, but the length of our skirts or our decision to wear a one-piece bright gold spandex jumpsuit are powerful statements about our right to take up space in this world and to use our clothes to show our identity, not yours. Ever since the Greek poet Hesiod complained that "youth are reckless beyond words" in the eighth century BC, teenagers have continued to dress in a way that alarms and infuriates older generations, whether it's the frivolous use of curling irons for a church service or a ripped My Chemical Romance T-shirt for a wedding ("show some bloody respect!"), the adolescent take on a suitable occasion outfit is still more likely to resemble Courtney Love on a five-day bender.

When the brilliantly normal Sasha and Malia Obama rocked up at the White House "turkey pardoning", they looked exactly as they are: fed-up teenagers dragged to a family event, channelling a bit of safe rebellion via a rolled up waistband. Teenagers need to experiment with stupid trends, join their peers in sporting tattered neon wristbands or dropped crotch monkey jeans, and traumatise parents with slapped-on clown makeup. If they don't, how will they ever learn what suits them, or have hilariously embarrassing photos to look back on?

As a result, I never tried to control what my teenage stepchildren wore outside school, believing it to be entirely their right to express themselves as they wished - except for once.

When my stepdaughter was 13, she was "phonejacked" (as they quaintly called it back in 2002), and was required to appear in court. On the day, she came downstairs wearing more black eyeliner than Alice Cooper, a crop top and a pair of tracksuit bottoms. Sent back to change, she furiously shouted: "I'll be the least fashionable person in court!"

Teenagers don't do "appropriate" and nor should they. That's for later in life - when the rebellious rage has dimmed, and Whistles exerts a greater pull than Claire's Accessories.

As if being a teenage girl isn't bad enough - constantly feeling awkward, out of your depth, under scrutiny, living in fear of the unnerving gaze of your parents, middle-aged men, middle-aged women and, worst of all, your friends - it's hard to imagine how bad it would be if you factored in the added horror of your father being the president of the United States. No matter how assiduously you obey the Gap's injunction to "dress normal", you may still find yourself accused of disrespecting the nation and looking like a bar-frequenting floozie. Poor Sasha and Malia!

Luckily they have cool parents. (At least most of the time - no one's cool while they're pardoning a turkey.) Michelle and Barack don't force them to dress like little political zombie children, but let them appear in public in clumpy shoes and sloppy cardigans, looking bored and embarrassed. This is without doubt the correct way to look while taking part in a pathetic "tradition" instigated by Republicans in the 1980s. Michelle and Barack are perhaps human enough to understand this - and may even secretly enjoy the fact that their children feel able to sneer.

Telling teenagers how to dress is at least a proper tradition with a long history. (At minimum, 60 years long, although the dress and habits of "the young" come in for enough comment in 19th-century novels.) The problem is that it generally gets you absolutely nowhere.

DoE fines 11 factories Tk 1.47 crore for polluting environment

DHAKA : The Department of Environment (DoE) has fined 11 factories of Chittagong districts a total of Tk 1.47 crore for polluting environment by releasing untreated waste into water bodies, reports UNB.

The department fined the 11 factories following hearings held at DoE headquarters in the capital this week. DoE Director (Monitoring and Enforcement) Md Alamgir told UNB on Tuesday.

The Director fined seven factories Tk 66 lakh on Sunday and four other factories Tk 81 lakh on Monday.

The factories include six dyeing factories, two paper mills, two food manufacturers and a steel factory.

Of them, seven factories were fined for dumping untreated waste into Karnaphuli River stopping Effluent Treatment Plants (ETP), two food manufacturers for releasing untreated waste into Bay of Bengal using flawed ETPs, one factory for running without clearance of the Department and not setting ETP, and the remaining one factory for polluting air using flawed dust extraction system.

The 11 factories are Chittagong Asian Paper Mills Ltd at Nandirhat in Hathazari (Tk 8 lakh fine), Super Knitting and Dyeing Mills Ltd at Bayezid Bostami Road (Tk 13 lakh), MA Rahman Dyeing Industries Ltd at Jalalabad (Tk 5 lakh), Apex Foods Ltd at Sagorika Road (Tk 15 lakh), Sea Mark (BD) Ltd at Gahria Road (Tk 5 lakh), Make Paper and Board Mills Ltd at Oxygen intersection in Bayezid Bostami road (Tk 5 lakh), Bangladesh Steel Re-rolling Mills Ltd (Tk 15 lakh) at Nasirabad, Denim Plus (BD) Ltd at Chittagong Export Processing Zone (CEPZ) (Tk 36 lakh), Mithun Mithun Knitting and Dyeing Ltd at CEPZ, Jeans Express Ltd at Sagorika Road (Tk 11 lakh) and Imam Button Industries Ltd at Pahartoli (Tk 10 lakh).

Earlier, a team of the DoE headquarters, led by its director Md Alamgir conducted a drive against the seven factories in the port city of Chittagong on November 18 and four dyeing factories on November 19 and summoned the factory owners or representatives for hearing.

New study links carbon emissions and climate warming

Research has identified, for the first time, how global warming is related to the amount of carbon emitted.

A team of researchers from the universities of Southampton, Bristol and Liverpool have derived the first theoretical equation to demonstrate that global warming is a direct result of the build-up of carbon emissions since the late 1800s when human-made carbon emissions began. The results are in accord with previous data from climate models.

The theoretical equation reveals the complex relationship between carbon dioxide levels and the ocean system. Burning fossil fuels increases atmospheric carbon dioxide levels leading to global warming and the greenhouse effect, which is partly offset by the oceans taking in both heat and carbon.

The results show every million-million tonnes of carbon emitted will generate one degree Celsius of global warming. They also show that the build-up of carbon emitted over the last 200 years will then last for many centuries to millennia, even if carbon emissions are subsequently phased out.

The results also reveal that surface warming is related to the total amount of carbon emitted from fossil fuels, with little change over time as ocean carbon and changes in heat uptake almost cancel each other out.

Dr Phil Goodwin, from Ocean and Earth Science at the University of Southampton, said: "Our analysis highlights the nearly irreversible nature of carbon emissions for global warming. Once carbon has been emitted into the atmosphere the warming effect will last many centuries, even after much of the carbon has been absorbed by the ocean."

"We cannot wait until after significant anthropogenic warming has occurred to reduce carbon emissions and hope the climate goes back to normal by itself, it won't."

What Drives the Global Warming Debate?

Scientists have presented the most comprehensive evidence to date that climate extremes such as droughts and record temperatures are failing to change people's minds about global warming.

Instead, political orientation is the most influential factor in shaping perceptions about climate change, both in the short-term and long-term, said Sandra Marquart-Pyatt, a Michigan State University sociologist and lead investigator on the study.

"The idea that shifting climate patterns are influencing perceptions in the United States - we didn't find that," said Marquart-Pyatt, associate professor of sociology. "Our results show that politics has the most important effect on perceptions of climate change."

a two-day window or a particular community and a single measure of temperature, not an expansive sweep of multiple climate measures as the authors of this study do.

The study analyzed climatic storm-severity measures used by NOAA - temperature, drought, precipitation and wind velocity - from all 50 states in combination with the 11 years of public opinion data. "This gives us the pulse of the nation," said Marquart-Pyatt.

UK considers sustainable aviation fuel

A coalition of the UK's airlines, airports, manufacturers and air navigation service provider NATS, has launched its latest industry road map, which considers the opportunities for sustainable aviation fuels.

The Sustainable Aviation (SA) research identifies the potential for a 24 per cent reduction in aviation carbon dioxide emissions by 2050 and the generation of £265 million in economic value plus the creation of 4,400 jobs in the UK over the next 15 years.

However, the report, launched today at a reception at the Houses of Parliament, warns Government support will be vital to achieve this potential.

The research identifies and forecasts the potential volumes of sustainable aviation fuel to 2050, both for the UK and globally. It highlights the possible contribution such fuels can make to supporting the decarbonisation of the UK economy, the opportunities for job creation and economic growth as well as the viability of the market for producers, refiners and investors.

SA says it hopes to build on the successful work promoting innovation that Government has already undertaken with industry, in order to develop a shared vision that focuses on investing in the commercialisation of high-value sustainable aviation fuels.

The leading findings of today's road-map, include:

* Forecasts that by 2030 there could be 90-160 operational sustainable fuel plants globally with revenue estimated at £8-17 billion - with up to 12 plants in the UK

* Defines an opportunity to develop a domestic industry for sustainable aviation fuels generating up to £265 million in economic value, and supporting up to 4,400 jobs

* Identifies that with the right policy and investment framework, UK aviation can reduce its carbon dioxide (CO<sub>2</sub>) emissions by up to 24% by 2050 through the deployment of sustainable alternative fuels.

* Recommends the establishment of a public-private initiative to help realise these opportunities, similar to the USA's Commercial Aviation Alternative Fuel Initiative (CAAFI).

Jonathon Counsell, chair of Sustainable Aviation, said: "The UK aviation industry is committed to reducing its impact on the environment and this Road Map not only demonstrates an additional way for us to do so but also identifies a new industry that could supply thousands of jobs and hundreds of millions pounds to our economy."

New Report Shows Little Hope of Reaching 'Sustainable Population' in Next Century

According to recent projections, the number of people living on Earth could exceed ten billion by the end of this century. Now, a new study has examined what it would take to reverse that unrelenting growth and achieve a sustainable population that is less threatening to biodiversity and ecosystems around the world. Short of a global catastrophe, scientists say, the only way to halt this population momentum is to institute a planet-wide one-child policy within a few decades.

The new study comes on the heels of a statistical projection released in September. It analyzed U.N. data from July and calculated how likely population is to end up in different ranges. In particular, it found an 80 percent chance for a population between 9.6 billion and 12.3 billion by century's end, with the most likely figure at around 10.9 billion.

That number is not sustainable, according to Corey Bradshaw, a biologist at the University of Adelaide in Australia.

"Things like forest elephants? Kiss 'em goodbye. Tigers in India? They're gone," Bradshaw told mongabay.com.

Bradshaw and his Adelaide colleague, Barry Brook, examined whether it's possible to rein in population growth in the Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences. They found that without draconian limits on the number of children per family, population growth is "virtually locked in."

The researchers studied computer models of population over the next century, focusing particularly on how different parameters or levers affected their models.

"We're not out there trying to predict there will be X number of people on the planet as of 2100," Bradshaw said. "What we didn't really know is the strength of the different levers one can pull."

Bradshaw and Brook pulled on three levers. First was fertility: the average number of children women have. Next was mortality: the likelihood that people die by a certain age. And the last was primiparity: the average age at which women have their first child. They modeled "what if?" scenarios that adjusted these levers.

Indian JK chief minister Omar says Modi must apologize to people of Kashmir

NAGROTA: In the wake of the controversy over the hate speech by Union minister Sadhvi Niranjan Jyoti, Jammu & Kashmir chief minister Omar Abdullah on Wednesday said that Prime Minister Narendra Modi must apologize to the residents of Kashmir.

"Kashmir is a Muslim majority state and the Prime Minister who will hold a rally in Srinagar must apologize to the people of Kashmir as his cabinet colleague has used abusive language for people like us," Omar told reporters on the sidelines of an election rally here.

Asking BJP as how the party now expects votes from the people of Kashmir when such

Jammu & Kashmir chief minister Omar Abdullah on Wednesday said that Prime Minister Narendra Modi must apologize to the residents of Kashmir. The times of India derogatory words have been used for the people, he said "Modi should explain why no action was taken against the minister ... and apologize."

Reacting to a question on the Prime Minister's upcoming election rally in Kashmir in which BJP has claimed that it expects the participation of more than one lakh people, Omar said, "BJP has no dearth of money and they can offer food and arrange vehicles so it would not be a big deal to gather one lakh people from the entire Kashmir valley."

He said even separatist-turned-politician Sajad Lone can alone bring more than 20 to 30 thousand people to attend Modi's rally.

Philippines disaster city braces for strong typhoon

TACLOBAN, PHILIPPINES: Authorities in a Philippine city ravaged by Super Typhoon Haiyan were Wednesday faced with how to keep residents still living in tents after the 2013 disaster safe as a new, powerful cyclone threatened to bring giant waves ashore.

The state weather service said Typhoon Hagupit was heading west for the central islands of Samar and Leyte, and would make landfall as early as Saturday afternoon with gusts of up to 170 kilometres (106 miles) an hour.

Residents in the city of Tacloban, which bore the brunt of Haiyan—the most powerful storm ever to make landfall last year were clearing out grocery shelves in an effort to stock up on emergency provisions ahead of the storm.

Meanwhile authorities were due to meet later Wednesday to identify new evacuation centres far from shore.

Tacloban city Vice Mayor Jerry Yaokasin said about 500 families were still living in tents more than a year after waves up to seven metres tall driven ashore by Haiyan destroyed their homes.

Indians mark 30th anniv of Bhopal disaster

INDIA : Hundreds of survivors of the Bhopal gas leak took to the streets Wednesday to mark the 30th anniversary of the tragedy with protests demanding harsher punishments for those responsible and more compensation for the victims of the world's worst industrial disaster, reports AP.

On the morning of Dec. 3, 1984, a pesticide plant run by Union Carbide leaked about 40 tons of deadly methyl isocyanate gas into the air of Bhopal, quickly killing about 4,000 people. Lingering effects of the poison raised the death toll to about 15,000 over the next few years, according to government estimates.

11 more bodies recovered near sunken South Korean ship

SEOUL : Fishermen recovered 11 more bodies from the western Bering Sea Wednesday near where a South Korean fishing ship sank earlier this week, reports AP.

The bodies appear to be from the ship lost Monday in the waters near Russia, according to an official from the foreign ministry who didn't want to be named citing office rules. The U.S. rescue ship Munro should arrive Thursday to help the search effort.

The crew included 35 Indonesians, 13 Filipinos, 11 South Koreans and one Russian inspector, according to the South Korean government. It's believed the ship began to list after stormy weather caused seawater to flood its stor-

52 fishermen still missing after South Korean trawler sinks in Bering Sea. Reuters

The bodies were found by fishing vessels searching the debris of the sunken Oryong 501, said the ministry official. Furious relatives have blamed the company and the ship's captain for not doing enough to save their family members. Rough seas and bad weather mean there is little hope that anyone will be found alive.

Coast guard helicopters from Russia and the age areas, according to officials from the government and the company that owns the ship.

The ship left South Korea on July 10 to catch pollock, a winter delicacy in South Korea, according to company officials. The sinking struck a nerve in a country less than eight months from its deadliest maritime disaster in decades.

Australia says Embassies not there for absurd requests

AUSTRALIA: No, you can't get a loan to pay for a prostitute in Thailand. And seeking assistance to evict a polecat above a ceiling in the U.S. is going to be futile, reports AP.

Australia is taking steps to curb such absurd requests that its traveling citizens have lodged with Australian embassies and consulates around the world.

Foreign Minister Julie Bishop announced the new measures Wednesday to underscore consular services as a last resort and to promote "a stronger culture of self-reliance and personal responsibility in the traveling public."

These measures include a new policy of providing minimal consular services to Australians who willfully, repeatedly or negligently get themselves into trouble. Charging for the consular help is also something the government is considering, she said.

"Our consular staff are not there to pay for the repairs to your jet ski; they're not there to pay your hotel bill; they're not there to lend you a laptop or to provide you with office space in the embassy for you to do your work," Bishop

Death anniversary of Omar Khayyam

Omar Khayyám died on this day in 1131. Outside Iran and Persian speaking countries, Khayyám has had an impact on literature and societies through the translation of his works and popularization by other scholars. The greatest such impact was in English-speaking countries; the English scholar Thomas Hyde (1636-1703) was the first non-Persian to study him.

The most influential of all was Edward FitzGerald (1809-83),[6] who made Khayyám the most famous poet of the East in the West through his celebrated translation and adaptations of Khayyám's rather small number of quatrains in the Rubaiyat of Omar Khayyam. He was born in 1809 May 10, 1809, born in Nishapur in North Eastern Iran. He was Persian poet, philosopher, mathematician, and astronomer not only at his age but also after his death to till.

Omar Khayyám died in 1131 and is buried in the Khayyám Garden at the mausoleum of Imamzadeh Mahrūq in Nishapur. In 1963, the mausoleum of Omar Khayyám was constructed on the site by Hooshang Seyhoun.

China, Australia agree to boost defence ties

BELJING: Beijing and Canberra have agreed to enhance military ties. Chinese state media reported, lauding defence relations between them even as Australia strengthens cooperation with the United States and Japan, reports Xinhua.

The move follows President Xi Jinping's visit to Australia last month, when they agreed to raise their ties to a "comprehensive strategic partnership" and sealed a free trade accord, the official Xinhua news agency reported late Tuesday.

Improving military relations illustrated "a new high of mutual political trust between our countries", it quoted Fan Changlong, vice chairman of China's Central Military Commission, as saying. "Military ties forge an important part of bilateral ties," he added.

Fan held talks with Mark Binskin, the head of Australia's military, and defence secretary Dennis Richardson, who were in China for an annual strategic dialogue.

Australia, a long-time defence ally of the United States, has also stepped up military ties with Japan and has occasionally tussled with China despite their close trade relations.

In July, Australian foreign minister Julie Bishop was quoted as saying that "China doesn't respect weakness" and that Canberra must "hope for the best and manage for the worst" in its relations with Beijing, prompting the ire of Chinese state media.

Bishop received a rare diplomatic dressing down from Chinese Foreign Minister Wang Yi when she visited Beijing in December last year after Canberra criticised China's declaration of an air defence zone in the East China Sea.

Last month, Australian Prime Minister Tony Abbott, US President Barack Obama and Japanese Prime Minister Shinzo Abe said they were committed to deepening their already strong security cooperation in the Asia-Pacific. Meeting on the sidelines of the G20 summit in Brisbane, they announced enhanced defence cooperation, including tri-lateral exercises, maritime security capacity building and maritime domain awareness.

They also called for the peaceful resolution of maritime disputes with China involved in territorial rows with Japan and several Southeast Asian countries.

Myanmar parliament to debate controversial religion laws

YANGON: Myanmar's president has approved a set of controversial draft religious laws inspired by radical Buddhist monks and sent them to parliament, officials said Wednesday, prompting rights groups to voice alarm over the divisive nature of the proposals, reports AFP/BSS.

The draft legislation—including curbs on inter-faith marriage, religious conversion and birth rates—will be debated by MPs and voted on in the coming parliamentary session, according to president's office director Zaw Htay.

"The president had to draft the bills, but it is (parliament's) responsibility to enact them," he told AFP.

Assad says US-led airstrikes not serious or efficient

BEIRUT : Syrian President Bashar Assad said in remarks published Wednesday that U.S.-led airstrikes targeting Islamic State group militants in his country are neither serious nor efficient, claiming they have failed to produce any tangible results.

Obama rules out alliance with Syria's Assad against IS AFP He also accused Turkey of continuing to provide direct support to the militants, reports AP.

Assad spoke in a rare interview conducted Nov. 28 in Damascus with Paris Match magazine, his first in months. His comments critical of the U.S. airstrikes appear intended to give the impression that his forces are the most effective in fighting Islamic extremists.

"You can't end terrorism with aerial strikes. Troops on the ground that know the land and can react are essential," the magazine quoted Assad as saying. "That is why there haven't been any tangible results in the two months of strike led by the coalition."

The full interview was expected to be published Thursday.

Both Assad's forces and the U.S. have been bombing Islamic State group targets in northern Syria, although U.S. officials say they don't coordinate strikes with his embattled government.

Asked by the magazine about whether he was afraid of suffering the same demise as former Iraqi dictator Saddam Hussein or Libya's Moammar Gadhafi, Assad reportedly replied: "The captain doesn't think about death, or life, he thinks about saving his ship. If he thinks about sinking, everyone will die."

"We are running the ground battles against Daesh, and we have noticed no change, especially with Turkey providing direct support to these regions," he was quoted as saying, using an Arabic acronym for the group.

Assad has insisted throughout Syria's nearly 4-year-old conflict that he has been fighting foreign-inspired Islamic extremists and "terrorists" - not Syrians calling for reform and freedom. Activists say more than 200,000 people have been killed since March 2011.

Asked by the magazine about whether he was afraid of suffering the same demise as former Iraqi dictator Saddam Hussein or Libya's Moammar Gadhafi, Assad reportedly replied: "The captain doesn't think about death, or life, he thinks about saving his ship. If he thinks about sinking, everyone will die."

Somerset Maugham sails for Pago Pago

On this day in 1916, W. Somerset Maugham departs on a voyage to Pago Pago. Characters he meets on the voyage, including a prostitute and a missionary, inspire the story "Miss Thompson," which is published in his 1923 story collection, The Trebling of a Leaf. The story becomes the play Rain, which is filmed three times, once starring Gloria Swanson, once with Joan Crawford, and once with Rita Hayworth.

Somerset Maugham was born at the British embassy in Paris in 1874. Both his father and his grandfather were lawyers, and his brother later became Lord Chancellor of England. Maugham was unsuited to the law profession, however, due to his pronounced stammer and extreme shyness, exacerbated by the death of his parents when he was 10. Maugham chose medicine instead of law. His first novel, Liza of Lambeth, describes his experiences working in London's slums.

Obama meets with business leaders at 11:15 a.m.

Washington: President Barack Obama is meeting with leading CEOs to discuss ways to promote the economy and create jobs during his last two years in office, reports UNB.

Obama on Wednesday will attend the quarterly meeting of the Business Roundtable, an association of CEOs. Obama plans to give a speech and also take questions.

The White House says Obama will use the meeting to promote bipartisan opportunities to grow the economy and the middle class, such as tax reform, infrastructure spending and trade agreements.

Republican leaders clash on foreign policy

Washington: Even as they attack President Barack Obama's foreign policy, and with politics turning to the 2016 race for president, the most ambitious Republican leaders have begun to clash with each other over the U.S. role in global affairs, reports UNB.

Several high-profile Republicans offered differing visions this week for U.S. leadership abroad, pitting the party's national security hawks against libertarian-minded conservatives whose influence is growing in Republican politics. Largely an afterthought in the last presidential contest, foreign policy has become a place where prospective 2016 contenders can jockey for position before officially declaring plans to seek the White House.

Jordan hopes for Israeli-Palestinian UN resolution

United Nations: Jordan's U.N. envoy said Tuesday she will be trying to get the U.N. Security Council to agree on a resolution before Christmas that would press for a two-state solution to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, reports UNB.

Ambassador Dina Kawar, the Arab representative on the 15-member council, told a group of reporters that there are Palestinian and French drafts, and there may be others.

The Palestinians circulated a draft on Oct. 1 asking the council to set a deadline of November 2016 for an Israeli withdrawal from all Palestinian territory occupied since 1967. French Foreign Minister Laurent Fabius said last Friday that France is working for a U.N. resolution aimed at restarting Israeli-Palestinian peace negotiations - and setting a two-year deadline for success.

Kawar said Jordan will be working to get a text acceptable to all council members.

"We will be sitting together and seeing ... the possibilities of working with everybody to get as close as possible to a unified text that will be for the interests of everybody," Kawar said. "We're going to try to make it before Christmas. If not, it will be in January. We really want to get everybody on board and that's our intention."

Support from the United States, Israel's closest ally and a veto-wielding member of the Security Council, is crucial for approval of a new resolution. The Obama administration has made clear its opposition to a deadline for the end to Israel's occupation, insisting that the only way to end the Israeli-Palestinian conflict is through negotiations.

Diplomats said the Obama administration has been working on elements for a possible resolution, but Washington hasn't circulated anything yet. They spoke on condition of anonymity because there has been no U.S. announcement.

The push for Security Council action follows the failure of U.S.-brokered peace talks between Israel and the Palestinians led by Secretary of State John Kerry, this summer's 50-day war between Israel and Hamas, the Palestinian faction that controls the Gaza Strip, and the recent upsurge in violence sparked by disputes over Jerusalem's hilltop complex that is revered by Muslims and Jews.

Kawar said Jordan will be working to get a text acceptable to all council members.

Somalia car bomb targets UN convoy near airport

Somalia : At least four people have been killed in a car bomb blast next to a UN convoy in Somalia's capital, police say. The bomb exploded as the convoy travelled along the road near the airport in Mogadishu, police said. A second blast targeted African Union (AU) troops about 25km (15 miles) from the city, but details are sketchy, a BBC reporter says, reports AP.

Al-Shabab, linked to al-Qaeda, has often carried out attacks in Somalia and neighbouring Kenya. On Tuesday, it killed 36 quarry workers near the northern Kenyan town of Mandera. It has not commented on the latest explosions. "The explosion was very big and there is smoke all around the area. I can hardly see people lying on the ground, either dead or wounded," witness Shamso Idle told AFP news agency.

Police said at least four people, including a

Somali intelligence officer, were killed and about 10 others were wounded in the blast, reports the BBC's Mohammed Moalimu from Mogadishu. The UN has not reported any casualties among its staff.

Its security personnel were at the site, inspecting the wreckage, our correspondent says.

The explosion targeting AU troops took place in Lafole village, south of Mogadishu, our correspondent says.

The AU has some 22,000 troops helping the weak and divided Somali government battle al-Shabab. The UN has no troops in Somalia, and says its staff are involved in political activities aimed at helping the government achieve stability. Various armed groups have been battling for control of Somalia since the overthrow of President Siad Barre in 1991.

Foreign security personnel were at the site of the blast.

Arjun Kapoor's "childhood dream" fulfilled in Tevar

Entertainment Desk

Arjun Kapoor's childhood dream of working with producer father Boney Kapoor has come true with upcoming action-drama film Tevar, where the father-son duo has collaborated for the first time.

Arjun, who is Boney Kapoor's son from his first wife Mona Shourie, said it was a nice moment to work in the film which also stars his uncle Sanjay Kapoor. "It's not yet sunk in that I have worked for a home production. It has always been a dream working with dad, Sanjay (Kapoor) chachu and Anil (Kapoor) chachu. And that happened in my fifth film. There are more emotions attached at the personal level than at the professional front," Arjun told PTI in an interview.

The 29-year-old Finding Fanny actor said he waited for a long time to work with his father.

"I am emotional by nature. I waited for this opportunity for 29 years. And it's not an easy job to be accepted as an actor. Obviously, he has a sense of pride and that reflects in our emotions and that I guess will happen quite often," he said.

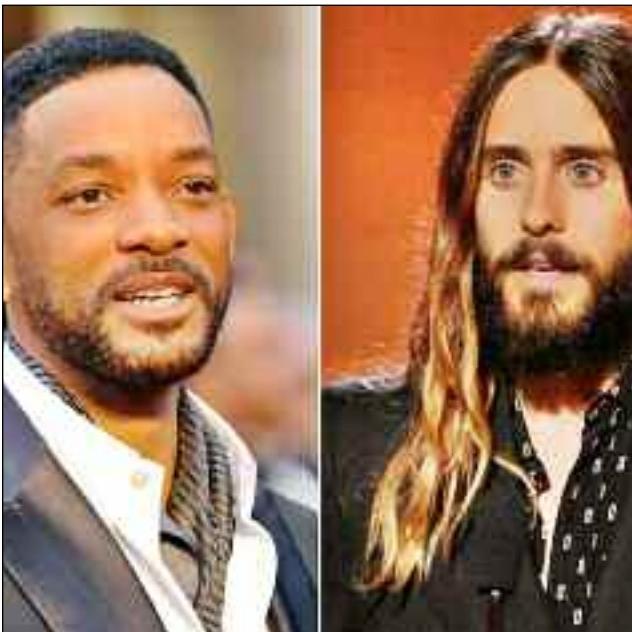

Arjun recalled how he used to accompany his father on his grand sets. "I always thought that my father is the biggest producer in this world. His films sets used to be so big that I used to get lost in it."

During the shooting of Loafer there was a huge set at Ramoji film city and similarly during Roop Ki Rani Choron Ka Raja, the set was for 150 junior artists and 200 actors," he said.

The actor said his father always taught him to work hard to get success.

"I learnt from dad that hard work never fails. He always asked me to work hard to survive in the industry. He is always encouraging. One thing which I like about him is he is not interfering even as a father or as a producer. Whatever wrong or right decisions I have made he always supported me. He has given me that much respect and credit. Always supported my decisions in my personal and professional life," Arjun said.

Tevar, which hits theatre on January 9 next year, is a remake of Telugu blockbuster Okkadu. It stars actress Sonakshi Sinha opposite him.

Rumours suggest he would be battling Christoph Waltz for the main antagonist role in the next 007, but the thought of Mr Hawking on screens is not quite so far-fetched, with him having famously appeared in episodes of Star Trek and The Simpsons.

Earlier this year, he also popped up in a special video recorded for the Monty Python Live (Mostly) shows in London, singing the Galaxy Song

The resurgence Bangladesh waited a year for

Sports Desk

There are several ways to measure Bangladesh's success in the Test and ODI series against Zimbabwe over the past six weeks. The 8-0 winning streak represents a general sense of relief and a restoration of a cricket-mad public's trust in the team, reports Cricinfo.

They had lost 22 of 27 matches across formats till mid-September, and had come back devastated from the tour of West Indies. The team was sore from losing everywhere and to every kind of opponent. The captaincy was split and one of their more dependable batsmen was dropped. But their best player returned and all the eggs were put in the Zimbabwe basket. There was an all too familiar hiccup on the third day of the Dhaka Test, but Mushfiqur Rahim and Taijul Islam manoeuvred Bangladesh to victory and Zimbabwe were broken. There have been periods when a Hamilton Masakadza, or a Sikandar

Raza or a Tinashe Panyangara resisted but it never lasted too long. Zimbabwe were confused by spin and they struggled against pace in the ODI series as well. Bangladesh's catching and fielding was largely good and most importantly, the batsmen remained consistent. The opening pair had to be tweaked only once in the Tests. Imrul Kayes was drafted in for the out-of-form Shamsur Rahman and became party to Bangladesh's highest first-wicket partnership. Tamim Iqbal had been at the other end during the 224-run stand in Chittagong, and his patience and hunger to bat out the entire day's play in Khulna was of great benefit to Bangladesh. A slightly patchier Tamim was part of two superb starts in the ODI series as well. His partner Anamul Haque must address his limited footwork but has shown a desire to bat long, which bodes well for a line-up that craves stability. Shakib Al Hasan

Man United beats Stoke 2-1 for 4th straight win

Sports Desk

Manchester United relied on a fortunate winning goal from Juan Mata and a breathtaking double save from David de Gea in injury time to beat Stoke 2-1 and secure a fourth straight Premier League victory on Tuesday, reports AP.

Comfortable but never convincing at Old Trafford, United ended up scrambling to the three points that kept the team in the top four and maintained its revival under new manager Louis van Gaal.

Mata's winner in the 59th minute had a slice of fortune about it, with the Spain playmaker's inswinging free kick from the right curling over the heads of a number of players in the box and bouncing into the far corner.

However, it needed two superb saves from De Gea and a goal-line clearance from Ashley Young - all in the final two minutes of injury time - to prevent Stoke from checking United's momentum.

"I am not happy with the performance," Van Gaal said. "Maybe we forced the luck and that is also because of the fighting spirit."

Without the injured pair of Wayne Rooney and Angel Di Maria, United lacked creativity and took a 21st-minute lead through a direct route when Marouane Fellaini scored a towering, far-post header.

Steven Nzonzi equalized in the 39th for Stoke with a powerful shot from the edge of the area and failed to genuinely test United until a frantic, final few minutes.

"The episodes at the end were unbelievable," said Stoke manager Mark Hughes, who spent 13 years at United as a player across two spells.

United has been looking to restore the fear factor at Old Trafford - but its makeshift team was far from intimidating without Rooney and Di Maria, and a defense containing wingers Young and Antonio Valencia as full backs.

In the end, two high balls into the box - crosses that Stoke's physically imposing teams down the years were masters at dealing with - were the downfall of the hard-working but limited visitors.

Fellaini nipped in front of left back Erik Pieters to meet a hanging cross to the far post by Ander Herrera with a downward header into the center of the goal.

Stoke should have been behind by then, with Herrera blasting a shot over the bar after Robin van Persie had intercepted a weak clearance by goalkeeper Asmir Begovic.

Nzonzi scored with Stoke's only shot on goal in the first half but United restored its lead just before the hour mark when Mata swung in a cross that narrowly eluded leaping United defender Marcos Rojo, who initially claimed the goal, and dropped into the far corner.

Fit-again Colombia striker Radamel Falcao came on for the final 12 minutes for United to replace 19-year-old James Wilson, who came in for Rooney.

But it was Stoke which finished the stronger, with Mamadou Diouf seeing a header brilliantly parried out by De Gea and then having his goalbound shot cleared off the line by Young.

"I'm happy with the result," Van Gaal said, "tomorrow we have a Christmas party and it's important we can enjoy that."

Hughes died last Thursday, two days after being hit by a bouncer in a first class match in Sydney, leaving the cricketing world to mourn his death.

Hughes's funeral was held early Wednesday, as Pakistan and New Zealand prepare for the shortest format of the game after drawing a preceding Test series 1-1.

Pakistan's Twenty20 captain Shahid Afridi said Hughes's tragic death has left the cricketing world in a shock.

"Hughes died very young and his tragic death has left everyone shocked," said Afridi on Wednesday. "We are thankful to the sponsors who have decided to dedicate the trophy in memory of Hughes as a mark of respect," said Afridi on Wednesday.

Pakistan are boosted by the return of paceman Umar Gul, who has not played international cricket since April due to a knee problem.

Gul is the second highest wicket-taker in Twenty20 with 80 in 56 games, five behind Ajmal's 85.

He famously took 5-6 in a World Twenty20 group match against New Zealand at The Oval when Pakistan won the title in 2009.

Pakistan will hope their pace attack, which also includes the lanky 7ft, 1 inch (2.1m) Mohammad Irfan supplement the bowling attack which has spinners in Raza Hasan and Shahid Afridi.

Pakistan had a miserable World Twenty20 in Bangladesh where they failed to reach the last four for the first time in five editions of the tournament.

That prompted captain Mohammad Hafeez to step down, giving the responsibility to all-rounder Afridi for a second stint.

But Afridi's return as captain wasn't auspicious as Pakistan lost the only Twenty20 against Australia in Dubai in October by six wickets.

Afridi said Pakistan will not underestimate New Zealand who are without their dashing skipper Brendon McCullum who, along with pacemen Tim Southee and Trent Boult, have returned to New Zealand to prepare for the upcoming home series against Sri Lanka.

"New Zealand are a dangerous limited over side and we will not underestimate them," said Afridi. "We have to be at our best to beat them."

McCullum smashed a brilliant 202 to help New Zealand win the third and final Test in Sharjah on Sunday in the series-leveling win.

Kane Williamson, who has led New Zealand in three one-day matches and two Twenty20s will lead the Black Caps while Ross Taylor, fast bowler Adam Milne and batting all-rounder Anton Devcich return to the squad.

Pacemen Mitchell McClenaghan and Kyle Mills and spinner Nathan McCullum will also boost New Zealand.

Pakistan have beaten New Zealand in six of their nine Twenty20s with three losses.

After the second Twenty20, also in Dubai on Friday, both teams will play five one-day internationals.

Hughes's funeral was held early Wednesday, as Pakistan and New Zealand prepare for the shortest format of the game after drawing a preceding Test series 1-1. AP

Like everyone else, Mehrab Hossain kept himself updated about Phillip Hughes' condition on November 25, when he was struck by a bouncer during a Sheffield Shield match at the Sydney Cricket Ground, and learned of his death two days later. Mehrab also kept tabs on Sean Abbott, the bowler who delivered that bouncer. Mehrab has followed everything that players and the media have been saying about whether or not Abbott will be able to play cricket again. Mehrab would know exactly what Abbott is going through, feeling, and perhaps even thinking. On February 20, 1998, Mehrab played the pull shot that struck Raman Lamba on his unprotected forehead while he was fielding at short leg during a club game in Dhaka. Lamba, 38 and a former India player, died two days later.

Serena's Slammers lose again as Aces continue to dominate

Serena Williams returned to the scene of her WTA Finals win but could not prevent her Singapore Slammers team slumping to a fourth straight defeat in the inaugural International Premier Tennis League (IPTL) on Tuesday. The world number one is the highest-profile player participating in the four-city mixed team event at Singapore's Indoor Stadium this week but it was the unbeaten Delhi-based Indian Aces who continued to dominate the early proceedings. The Aces were on court first as a sparse crowd witnessed the form side of the tournament ease to a 30-11 victory over the UAE Royals in the five-set format tie that is decided on games won rather than overall set victories.

Dhaka University Pro Vice Chancellor-Academic Professor Dr. Nasreen Ahmad on Wednesday addressing a educational ceremony at university's RC Majumdar auditorium. German Academic Exchange Service (DAAD), located in Dhaka, organized the seminar aiming to support of international academic cooperation.

Prof Imtiaz barred from attending Karachi University conf I got surprised; it's a barrier to freedom of speech, says Imtiaz

DHAKA : Dhaka University Prof Dr Imtiaz Ahmed on Wednesday expressed his displeasure over a decision of Karachi University (KU) barring him from attending a conference and termed it a barrier to freedom of speech, reports UNB.

"I got surprised hearing the decision, but nothing to do," he told UNB over phone on Wednesday.

He was supposed to present the keynote paper at the conference titled 'Challenges of Transition in Social Sciences' today organised by KU faculty of social sciences.

"I was supposed to fly for Pakistan on December 1 but they asked me not to go," said Prof Imtiaz, a teacher of International Relations and Director of the Centre for Genocide Studies at Dhaka University, adding that it was also embarrassing for the university.

Responding to a question, he said either Jamaat-e-Islami or local organisation, probably raised questions about his writings on the Liberation War of 1971, and the university authorities apparently accepted their suggestion.

"It's very natural an academic will keep on writing. I didn't write anything against the people of Pakistan. I wrote about the role of Pakistan during 1971 which is known to all," he said.

However, many in the Pakistan expressed dissatisfaction over the decision, said the DU teacher.

"It seems that the issue of freedom of speech is gradually falling in trouble in the entire subcontinent," he added.

The administration of Karachi University (KU) has stopped Bangladeshi scholar Prof Dr Imtiaz Ahmed from participating in a conference organised on the campus on Wednesday, reportedly giving in to pressure from a student organisation, reports The Dawn.

"The university administration had some concerns relating to his participation and I was requested to politely convey the message to the senior professor, which I did," Prof Moonis Ahmar, the dean of the faculty of social sciences, KU, said and confirmed the information but declined to comment further.

University registrar Moazzam Ali Khan, however, expressed his unawareness of the matter and said: "I am not aware of any university administration's concerns. Usually, when such events are organised, respective departments submit a list of speakers invited to the event but that was not done in this case."

Sources said that the university took the step following a meeting of the vice chancellor with representatives of a student organisation that strongly objected to the professor's participation in the conference.

Their opposition, the sources said, had stemmed from the Bangladesh government's handling of Jamaat-e-Islami leaders.

President of Karachi University Teachers Society Prof Jamil Kazmi said teachers in principle supported the freedom of speech, and no student organisation should be allowed to interfere in academic matters.

"Having said so, I do believe that concerns relating to Dr Imtiaz Ahmed have some genuine grounds considering his work; some of which is available on the internet. His work is controversial and, to some extent, against our country and ideology," the report quoted him as saying.

KHULNA : Leaders of different professional and socio-cultural organizations observed programmes in protest of shifting equipments of Khulna station of BTV and the move to close the proposed Cancer Institute of Khulna Medical College Hospital (KMCH) to Dhaka, reports BSS.

The leaders expressed their grave concern on the issues and demanded sending of BTV equipments back to Khulna immediately and not to move machineries from Khulna Cancer Institute to Dhaka.

The leaders of Greater Khulna Action Coordination Committee (GKADC) today at a press conference at Khulna Press Club sought intervention of the Prime Minister, Health Minister and Information Minister into the matter.

Secretary General of the committee Sheikh Mossaraf Hossain read out the statement at the conference and alleged shifting of a camera, one set of editing panel and one video monitor from Khulna station of BTV to Dhaka last week exposed conspiracy to deprive the people of Khulna region.

President of the committee Sheikh

Ashrafuzzaman, ex-president advocate Daud Ali, Law maker of Khulna-2 constituency and newly elected general secretary of Khulna city unit AL Mizanur Rahman Mizan, President of city unit BNP Nazrul Islam Monzu, Mayor of Khulna City Corporation and general secretary of city unit BNP Moniruzzaman Mony, among others, addressed the conference. The leaders demanded of the government to allocate necessary fund for setting up a full-fledged cancer institute.

"We fervently appeal the government to fulfill our demand for a full-fledged TV station in Khulna as early as possible," they said.

They urged the government for not shifting two important equipments to Dhaka from the proposed Cancer Institute set up at the KMCH.

Meanwhile, the leaders of Khulna Cultural Development Committee (KCDC) on Tuesday handed over a memorandum to the Prime Minister, the Health Minister and the Information Minister through Khulna Divisional Commissioner Md. Abdus Samad.

Law maker of Khulna-2 constituency Mizanur Rahman Mizan, AL leaders Kazi Enayet Hossain, Sheikh Siddiquur Rahman, among others, addressed the programme.

While talking to KMCH superintendent Dr. Abdus Samad said the government sent the machines worth about Tk 24 crore to KMCH for treatment of cancer patients in southern part of the country.

"I strongly opposed the decision when this issue came up for discussion in a high level meeting held on November 26 in the Ministry of Health with the Health Minister Md. Nasim in the chair," he said. The Health Minister formed a three-member committee in the meeting to submit a report if these two very important machines are at all needed for Cancer Institute of KMCH or not, he added.

He admitted that so far there has been the main focus on power generation without giving simultaneous attention to the other two segments – power transmission and distribution.

Mamata had hinted at her party's changing role on the enclave issue before the Lok Sabha election in March. When the draft of the land boundary agreement was made during a parliamentary panel meeting last week, the representatives of the TMC agreed to it.

The new stand of the TMC is a marked departure from what it had spoken earlier on the issue. Mamata Banerjee had stalled talks between India and Bangladesh over the sharing of the Teesta River water and also pulled out of the Bangladesh-bound entourage of former prime minister Manmohan Singh, causing immense embarrassment to New Delhi.

The protocol that was signed between New Delhi and Dhaka in 2011 could not be ratified in Parliament. In September 2013, when the then UPA government tried to table the Bill in Rajya Sabha, it was torn off by the protesting TMC MPs. It was said that the enclave swap would put Mamata's key vote-bank of minorities under threat.

Bangladesh has been importing 500MW electricity through the lines. But, later on, Power Division officials shifted their stance without any explanation.

Even, they failed to determine the actual reason behind the nationwide disaster in the power system that kept the whole country in blackout for about 11 hours.

While placing the recommendations at a press briefing at the Power Ministry conference room, State Minister for Power and Energy Nasrul Hamid said they believed that the current half-manual, half-automated system in the national load dispatch centre that failed to handle the under-pressure problem has been the main reason of the nationwide grid failure on November 1.

He admitted that so far there has been the main focus on power generation without giving simultaneous attention to the other two segments – power transmission and distribution.

goodbye to Phillip Hughes

that "the entire cricket world is in shock and a state of grief".

In Hughes' small hometown of Macksville, on Australia's east coast, tributes to the opener who scored three centuries in 26 Tests hung in shop windows, while ribbons in the green and gold colours of the Australian Test team adorned telephone poles.

The funeral was a huge event in Macksville, with shops closing and residents in mourning. Just outside town, one business created a huge tribute using three cherry pickers as cricket stumps and putting Hughes' Test number 408 across them.

At Hughes's old primary school, St

Patrick's, dozens of bats lined the front fence, many bearing messages remembering the hugely popular opener who was not out on 63 when he was struck.

A photo memorial, flowers and cricket equipment were laid behind the stumps where Hughes was struck down last Tuesday. The pitch and centre square were roped off as a mark of respect, and the pitch on which Hughes played his final game will be retired and not used again this summer.

Hughes' parents Greg and Virginia and siblings had invited the whole town to the service at Macksville High School, where about 1,000 crammed into the hall and hundreds more watched on screens in overflow areas.

JaPa MPs to quit Cabinet : Ershad

RANGPUR : Jatiya Party Chairman HM Ershad on Wednesday said his party members will surely quit the cabinet as they do not want to take the responsibility of this government's failures, reports UNB.

"We'll take a decision to this end today or tomorrow. We'll definitely take the decision. My wife and the opposition leader also said we'll ultimately step aside from the cabinet," he said. Talking to reporters at his Rangpur residence, Ershad further said, "We're yet to finalise the date. We'll finalise the decision after discussing it with the party presidium members." Earlier in the day, Ershad, also a special envoy to the Prime Minister, arrived in Rangpur on a three-day visit.

The former military ruler voiced his anger and frustration over the question paper leak of the primary terminal exams. "The question preparers of the primary exams have got leaked. Where're we taking the country to? It's now become a burning question to people."

AHMED NUR

Sushtho Jibon, managing director of Hijra Bobby described her life experience to The Bangladesh Today and said "I used to monitor myself in the beginning. And tried to control how I walked, talked, behaved and dressed up, just to hide my sexuality. I tried to fit in the common culture of the world".

"There was a huge feeling of incompleteness all the time - having something wrong with my body and not being able to connect with my soul." "I could not die," Bobby said with a smile. "And that was turning point in life, I thought of living my life, as I couldn't end it."

Although 'Hijra group' is recognized in all prominent documents, they are involved in many unwanted deeds in the society. He also added, "Besides being engaged in prostitution sector, sometimes they are seen claiming extortion from general people even in public trains, buses, launches and other public places."

When Willie Murphy gets in the gym, it's clear that she's not a typical 77-year-old. Murphy, of Rochester, New York, is able to do feats of strength that are difficult for people of any age. One-handed pull-ups, one-handed pushups, and fingertip pushups are no problem for Murphy, the Mirror reports.

The 105-pound grandmother can also deadlift 215 pounds, a feat that recently won her the coveted World Natural Powerlifting Federation 2014 Lifter of the Year at last month's WNPF World Championships in Riverdale, Georgia.

Murphy started lifting just a few years ago when she saw a sign at her local YMCA for a weight-lifting competition. When she asked if she could participate, an employee said, "Go for it, granny," according to the Rochester Democrat and Chronicle.

Murphy works out three days a week, and says it's important for younger people to see her at the gym. "They see I'm old and I'm not being pushed around in a wheelchair," she said, according to USA Today. "I can shovel my own snow. And I can push my car if it gets stuck in the snow... I'm almost 80 years old and I am still living life."
